Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicant states a perforable bottom surface refers to a surface having no preexisting aperture, such that fluid can only pass through the surface when the surface has been perforated by a projection. This definition does not encompass the duck-billed valve described by Roberts. The term perforate is known in the art to have numerous definitions. Applicant has failed to point out where the specified definition is supported in the original specification. Where is it recited that the invention is limited to the definition as asserted by applicant. Applicants specification at paragraph 16 of the publication suggests the term perforated means pierced. As such, it only required that the bottom surface be piercable. There is no recitation of the negative limitation that the bottom surface be free of any preexisting apertures. The device of Roberts is peircable. Therefore it meets the the limitation of being perforable.

As to Berray et al. applicant attempts to rely upon a "configured to" phrase. The configured to phrase expressed the intended use or how one intends for the device to function along with unclaimed structures of multi-well block or guide plate. It has been held that a recitation with respect to the manner in which a claimed apparatus is intended to be employed does not differentiate the claimed apparatus from a prior art apparatus satisfying the claimed structural limitations.

Claims 2-3 have been amended to incorporated "configured to" phrases directed to the intended use or desired function of the seal plate with unclaimed elements of the multi-well block and guide plate. The claims do not add any further structure to that of claim 1. What specific structure of the seal plate allows for the device to perform the intended/desired use/function?
